Aviation Services Company Invests at Abbotsford International Airport

Abbotsford, June 11, 2014 – Abbotsford International Airport is pleased to welcome Canada Champion Aviation Group (CCAG) to our list of airport partners, announced Airport Authority Chair, Dave Holmberg.

CCAG has made significant investments at Abbotsford International. The company recently acquired the Baron Bar and Grill Lease area and Coastal Pacific Aviation, and has plans to expand the flight school and provide pilot training for airlines in China, as well as to provide support services to general aviation companies in China. CCAG's future expansion plans include a new hanger, office space, a training center, flight simulators and newer aircraft.

"We are very excited to have Canada Champion Aviation Group on board," said Holmberg. "They have some great plans for future development, and their business goals and vision align well with the Abbotsford Airport. We know that they will be a great addition to the expanding aerospace industry in our community."

CCAG is a Canadian company with local ownership. They are a worldwide provider of general aviation services including buyer consultations, pilot training, and maintenance and spare parts services.

Their unique experience is particularly extensive in Asia, where CCAG has built up very special relationships with local general aviation companies and authorities. CCAG's experience in China also includes managing business aircraft charter companies, aircraft sales and support services, and repair and overhaul services.
